REPORT ON TED TALK

It is usually believed that a well educated mind is the same as well as formed mind. But in his TED TALK , DrShashiTharoor underlines the difference between the two and explains that a more open approach when going through education is required, so that the mind is not just a 'well filled' one, but has actually grown and is prepared to deal with the many challenges that life will throw his/her way. Not only that, but only then will he be able to innovate and create entirely new things, just like we introduced the 'zero' into mathematics and so on. He aptly puts the various requirements of current situation in the competitive world and how our country India should focus on this to include the values to our young generation to take them to the next-level.

Unlike aging countries in the majority of the developed world, India has a large pool of future workforce with half of its current population under 25. Supported with an array of statistics, from the basic education system to quality of institute, explained with the support of 4 Es-Expansion, Equity, Excellence and Employability: Dr.Tharoor discusses the country's potential as well as the results that the Indian government has achieved in education since its independence, then addresses the biggest challenge that it is facing in educating its population and what to do about it
